

FREE FILM SCREENING AND DISCUSSION

Sponsored by the Liberal Studies Department at CSUF

In Kitale, Kenya, among countless other towns in the developing world, many street children have found an escape from their emotional and physical pains by becoming accidental consumers. Orphaned, barefoot, and malnourished, they habitually spend the scarce money they earn from odd jobs and charity not on food or water, but on a more immediate fix - glue - incidentally the same solvent-based kind that the wider world uses to cement shoes together. Equally naturalistic and investigative, "Glue Boys" documents their day-to-day plight in Kitale, Kenya. It also unveils the distribution chain of their addiction to sniffing glue, from the small-time street dealers who facilitate it, to the authorities who enable it, to the massive multinational corporations that profit from it.

Trailer: www.glueboys.com

The film will be followed by an audience discussion with film director Philip Hamer.

No admission charge:
Free and open to the public

Thursday November 3, 2011

7:00 PM

Mackey Auditorium
Ruby Gerontology Center
California State University, Fullerton
For information call: 949-677-8442